REMEMBER TO FORGET

I udstillingen "Remember to Forget" har jeg ladet mig inspirere af motiver og tendenser i nutidens ofte modstribende virkeligheder: Hvordan vi tilsyneladende lever fint med at se sjove kattevideoer på Facebook postet side om side med videoer af journalister, der bliver halshugget for øjnene af jublende fanatikere. Hvordan vi måske bare forsøger at holde tungen lige i munden og leve med værdighed i en kompleks og ofte uoverskuelig hverdag.

Mine motiver i "Remember to Forget" kan ses som en fortløbende dialog mellem den nære verden og verden udenfor: Hverdagen, familielivet, mine løbesko, hængekøjen i sommerhuset, mit rod på værkstedet, Facebook, mit mailprogram og alle nyhedsopdateringerne om verdens foruroligende morads.

Jeg er fascineret af menneskers evne til at overleve og tilpasse sig de mest udfordrende og komplekse livsvilkår. "War Studies" har vist, at engelske soldater klarede sig bedre end andre krigsfanger i de japanske koncentrationslejre, fordi de var i stand til at glemme eller fortrænge de forfærdelige omstændigheder, de var underlagt. Englændernes insisteren på disciplin, sang, gymnastik og five o'clock tea (uden te) betød, at de kunne fastholde deres værdighed, menneskeligheden og troen på et normalt liv hinsides lejrene.

I min nære virkelighed oplevede jeg som dreng, at det var en plage at skulle læse bøger, selvom jeg udmærket vidste, at det var godt og vigtigt. Min familie var meget kulturelt og litterært anlagt, men jeg kunne ikke finde ud af, hvordan jeg skulle komme ind i den verden. Noget åbnede sig imidlertid for mig, da jeg i historietimerne så Leni Riefenstahls "Triumph des Willens" og i det hele taget blev introduceret til Det Tredje Riges sans for iscenesættelse.

Som 11-årig sad jeg bøjet over store, støvede historiebøger om især nazismen. Jeg vidste godt, at tyskerne var de onde, og dem måtte man ikke holde med. Alligevel var der noget ved dem, der fascinerede mig – disse perfekte tabere. Tænk, at de havde tabt krigen på trods af deres inderlige tro på sig selv, deres egen styrke og perfektion: De smilede på fotografierne, selvom de foretog sig rædselsfulde ting. Kammeratskabet og troen på den fælles vision overskyggede tilsyneladende krigens gru.

Ude i vores have legede jeg krig med mig selv. Jeg var tysker, selvom jeg vidste, jeg dermed også ville tabe. Jeg kæmpede imod en usynlig overmagt og kastede en håndgranat – en pose med vand – hvorefter jeg smed mig på maven i min fars lavandelbed.

Det er nødvendigt at fortrænge verdens uoverskuelighed for at kunne leve i den. Det er raret, at jeg kan grave mig ned i min malerhule; ikke for at isolere mig, men for bedre at kunne bearbejde og leve i verden.

Remember to Forget.

Jeg maler et billede, accepterer at sidde midt i rodet og prøve at finde et system, en struktur, en vej alligevel.

REMEMBER TO FORGET

In my show "Remember to Forget" I have drawn upon scenes and tendencies of the repeatedly conflicting realities of today: How we live seemingly content with watching funny cats and videos of journalists being beheaded in front of jeering fanatics posted side by side on Facebook. How we are perhaps just trying to keep our heads straight and live with dignity in a complex, and often daunting, present.

My motifs in "Remember to Forget" can be seen as representing an ongoing dialogue between my immediate world and the world outside: My everyday and family life, my running shoes, the hammock at our summer house, the mess in my studio, Facebook, my email provider and all the constant updates on the disquieting turmoil of the world.

I am fascinated by the human ability to survive and adapt to even the most challenging and complex of circumstances. War Studies have shown that English soldiers coped better than other POWs in the Japanese concentration camps, because they managed to forget and downplay the horrible circumstances, they were subjected to. The insistence of the English on discipline, song, gymnastics and five o'clock tea (without the tea) meant that they could preserve their dignity, their humanity and the belief in a normal life beyond the camps.

As a child, in my immediate reality, I experienced that it was a nuisance to have to read a book, even though I knew that it was virtuous and important. My family was of a rather cultural and literary inclination, but I could not figure out how to enter that world. However, I had an epiphany of sorts, when I watched Leni Riefenstahl's "Triumph of the Will" and was given a more general introduction to the sense of aesthetic orchestration of The Third Reich.

At the age of eleven, I found myself hunched over great, dusty history books on Nazism in particular. I knew the Germans were the bad guys, and you couldn't root for them. Even so, something about them fascinated me – these perfect losers. Just imagine: They had lost the war despite of their ever-fervent belief in themselves, their own strength and perfection. They smiled in the photographs, even though they were doing atrocious things. Apparently, the comradeship and shared belief in a greater vision overshadowed the horrors of war.

In our backyard I staged my own private wars. I was a German, even though I knew, I would lose by default. I battled an invisible overlord and threw a hand grenade – a bag of water – and took a dive in my father's lavender patch.

It is essential to displace the incalculable nature of the world in order to inhabit it. It is nice to be able to immerse myself in my painting lair; not to isolate myself from, but to reside in and process the world.

Remember to forget.

I paint a picture; accept that I am knee-deep in chaos trying to find a system, a structure, a way anyway.
